

Your INL Update — Week of March 22, 2010

This is Nicole Stricker with your INL Update.

Idaho National Laboratory is the focus of Idaho Public Television's Dialogue program this week. You can see lab director John Grossenbacher discuss the lab's future at 8:30 p.m. Thursday. Viewers can also e-mail or call in questions or comments before and during the program.

High school students from Moscow, Coeur d'Alene and Boise have won the INL Scholastic Tournament state championship. The students earned a spot in the national competition by besting teams from comparably-sized schools across the state. The Department of Energy's National Science Bowl begins April 29 in Washington, D.C.

You can hear how INL is helping determine whether electric vehicles can reduce America's dependence on imported oil. A new public radio story describes a nationwide vehicle electrification program started this year. You can find the story at the INL in the News section of INL's home page.
