

Your INL Update — Week of Dec. 20, 2010

This is Nicole Stricker with your INL Update.

You've no doubt seen the Salvation Army's Red Kettles collecting donations in front of numerous local stores lately. You've also likely seen Idaho National Laboratory employee volunteers ringing the bells. INL employees donated two hours at a time to fill more than 50 bell-ringing shifts this year, which saved the charity more than $1,000 in wages.

You can learn more about these types of community contributions in a new feature story on INL's home page. In addition to highlighting Christmas efforts, the story summarizes the scholarships, donations, volunteer efforts and technical assistance INL provided throughout the past year.

Now that the historic New Millennium Nuclear Energy Summit has concluded, many are wondering what's next. A new feature story on INL's home page has the answer. It describes what happened at the summit, what working groups will do in the coming months and when their results will be made public.

This was your INL Update. You'll find more information at INL.gov, including community announcements and the latest INL news.
